List of Perfumes For The Cognitive Innate Group

April 27, 2025

The classification of perfumes for the innate Cognitive group was conducted and was created by the authors of this website. The sole purpose of this classification is to show the relationship between perfume odors and various innate groups, types, and temparaments. This list of perfumes and classification is an extension of the page "A Typological Classification Of Perfumes For Innate Types".

In countries of even earlier civilization, people came up with the idea that they could try to use natural smells to enhance their own. This is how perfumes came into being, which later became not only a symbol of self-expression and prosperity, but also as a way of dealing with depression and as a means of calming down (as some others believe).

Perfumes are in fact the strongest in perfumes because they are made up of more essential oils. Whereas, eau de toilette and colognes are weaker, with less essential oils inside. But the interesting thing about all perfumes is that many of them have a completely different smell and image. This is what prompted the authors of this typology and website to make a typology of perfumes as well.

You can start exploring the list of perfumes, but before you begin know that the authors of this typology are in no way connected to the manufacturers and retailers of these perfumes. This list includes perfumes, toilet water or colognes. They are all marketed to all people without exception. Therefore, this list of perfumes is not a recommendation for you. You are well aware that you can choose any perfume you want.

What is the basis of the perfume typology for the Cognitive group?

All perfumes were hand-picked and subjectively selected by the authors of this website. Personal experience and the authors' knowledge of typology were used for the purposes of scent distribution. The division was based on differences in innate group, thinking type, temperament (sanguine, choleric, phlegmatic, melancholic), and theoretical age of the types (young, middle, old). No gender division of perfumes was made. If you want to know what gender a particular perfume is for, you can find this information from manufacturers or sellers.
